What the War Moves Mean

By J. W. T. MASON

(Written for the United Press)

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—The cabinet crisis in France may be the beginning of the end of the war. It is an acknowledgment of dissatisfaction on the part of France with the progress of the war, and the final effort to put things to rights, particularly in the Balkans. If the new ministry does not improve the military and diplomatic situations, France may then consider peace.

The immediate cause of the crisis is the allies' diplomatic defeat in the Balkans. But deeper than that is the growing dependency at the inability to drive the Germans from France and penetrate Alsace-Lorraine, the coveted. Because the situation was so unsatisfactory at home, the general public did not approve the Balkan expedition which the French took.

The French believe that the British ought to assume responsibility for checking the Germans in the Balkans. Beyond doubt, there is a feeling that the British have been guilty of hesitation and incompetence, and have not aided the allies as much as they ought.

The German threat against Egypt and India, in the wake of a successful outcome in the Balkans, makes the British for the first time dependent for assistance.

However, the Balkan situation may eventually work out favorably for France, and then she will be more able to ask a new basis of understanding among the allies. This basis must relate to the kind of peace acceptable to them.

The Woman and Her Work

Janet Scudder, Sculptor

"The Little Lady of the Sea"

At an exhibition of women's work for the benefit of the cause of woman suffrage, Janet Scudder, who has won fame as a sculptor, exhibited her life size statue, "The Little Lady of the Sea." It served to show that women sculptors have become bold, and are not confined to inane subjects as in the past. The statue was one of the most admired pieces of work at the exhibition. Miss Scudder is daring in other ways, too. She has dared to give her age in the official biographies of herself. She was born in Terra Haute, and she studied in Cincinnati, Chicago and Paris. Her work has been exhibited in the Paris Salon, and some of her work is in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

ath country, which are always of interest. While the pictures were being flashed on the screen, a lecture on the subjects shown was given by Phil J. Sinnott, Klamath's representative at the Oregon Building.

Following the pictures, Klamath cheese, honey and celery were given to the visitors, after which most of the crowd went upstairs to enjoy the informal dance given by Klamath county.

Besides the Klamath county residents present, there were many former Klamathites wearing the "I'm From Klamath" ribbons. These expatriates residing in and around San Francisco proved conclusively that Klamath still looks good to them, as they praised the county to strangers whenever an opportunity occurred.

MOON TO SHINE ON SCHOOL BOOKS

"MOONLIGHT SCHOOLS" FOR BOYS AND GIRLS WHO NEVER HAD A CHANCE ARE OPENED IN NORTH CAROLINA

United Press Service

RALEIGH, N. C., Oct. 30.—"Moonlight schools" will open tonight throughout the state, Governor Craig having proclaimed November "Moonlight School Month."

In a state wide appeal Governor Craig pointed out that there are in North Carolina 132,000 white persons over 10 years of age who cannot read or write. This, he said, is because they "had no chance," being handicapped by inadequate school facilities in North Carolina after the war.

Schools for adult, white illiterate men and women will be held throughout the state every evening after work hours. On clear, moonlight nights reading classes will be conducted out doors.
